Introduction to the Court of Aldermen

Overview

The Court of Aldermen has commissioned this summary guide for the purpose of providing an overview of the leadership role it continues to play in The City of London – particularly in supporting London's role as a leading global financial hub in partnership with other key stakeholders.

For those unacquainted with the governance arrangements of The City of London Corporation it will hopefully provide you with an introduction and orientation to the Court of Aldermen's origins, purpose and unique and specific relationship with the Mayoralty, Shrievalty and Judiciary.

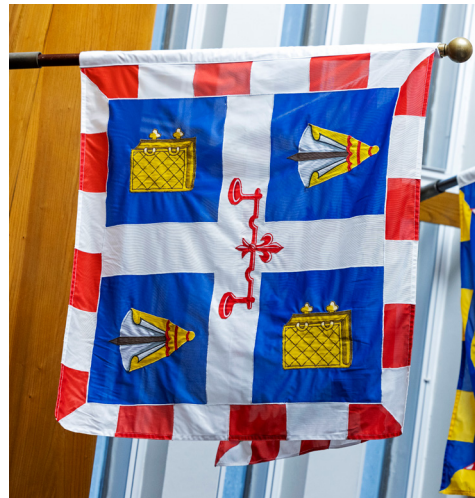

For those more intimate with the workings of civic life it may nonetheless help to inform, guide and supplement existing knowledge.

Irrespective of familiarity we hope that you find it an enjoyable read.

Historical Context

The Court of Aldermen ('CoA') is one of the three constitutive bodies which comprise the government of The City of London (the other two being Common Council and Common Hall and, collectively, 'The City of London Corporation' often shortened to just "The Corporation"). Although the legal title is 'Alderman', holders of the office are both male and female and the terms 'Alderman' and 'Alderman' have now become common parlance amongst the CoA and more widely across The City in referring to individual office holders.

The Corporation pre-dates Parliament and is legally presumed to have existed since time immemorial. It is reputed to be the longest continuously existing municipal government in the world.

Historical Context

Historically, the entire administration of The City was vested in the CoA but most of its responsibilities were subsumed by the Common Council (of which all Aldermen and Alderwomen are also members) over the course of the 13th and 14th centuries.

The Modern Court of Aldermen

As the senior of the elected members of Common Council for their geographic constituency (or ‘Ward’, of which there are 25 in The City), all Aldermen and Alderwomen actively serve in support of the civic government and many have pursued distinguished careers supporting those elements of The Corporation's work relating to ‘traditional’ local government activity, its extensive network of charities (including education), its residents, and its role in supporting and promoting the arts, culture, heritage and green spaces.

Uniquely, however, only a member of the CoA is eligible for election to the office of Lord Mayor of The City of London and many Aldermen and Alderwomen therefore see their role as primarily underpinning and supporting that office and progression into eventual service in it by:

Promoting, advocating and championing the City's commercial interests as the pre-eminent global financial and professional services hub.

Providing guidance, connectivity and civic leadership to businesses, residents and the many other institutions that are part of the extended City fabric.

Playing an active role in the development of strategy and policy for The City of London Corporation through participation in the relevant committees.

Leading the representation of their Ward in partnership with their Common Councillors.

The Modern Court of Aldermen

Aldermen and Alderwomen

of the civic government.

The Modern Court of Aldermen

The electoral franchise in the City of London is unique, allowing workers and residents to vote. This reflects the dual role of the City of London Corporation, both in looking after local services in the Square Mile – and in promoting City businesses, here and across the world. Voters elect the 100 members of the Common Council, as well as the 25 Aldermen and Alderwomen.

Unlike Common Councillors who serve a four-year fixed term, Aldermen and Alderwomen stand for re-election within 6 years of their previous election and, subject to periodic re-election, ultimately retire in line with the judicial retirement age (currently 75) as all holders of the office of Alderman are technically also holders of Judicial Office at the Central Criminal Court.

The Court of Aldermen formally meets seven times per year; most of its work is executed by two sub-committees: the General Purposes Committee (responsible for operational and financial matters, appointments to committees and City related promotion); and the Nominations Committee (which is specifically charged with the management of Aldermanic assessment and progression to the higher offices).

The Modern Mayoralty

Whilst the Mayoralty works closely with the national government of the day, it is 'with' government but not 'of' government, which gives it an independence and flexibility free of the considerations and constraints of national party politics.

The Modern Mayoralty

Given London's pre-eminence as a mercantile trading and commercial centre since its original foundation by the Romans around 43AD, it should come as no surprise that its government has been outward looking to the world and that international trade has always been at the root of its success over the centuries.

The first holder of the office of Mayor, Henry FitzAilwin, was appointed by King Richard I in 1189 and there have now been nearly 700 holders in a continuous line of succession since that date. For the sharp-eyed, the names of every Mayor since FitzAilwin are memorialised in the great stained glass windows of the Guildhall – the most famous of them, perhaps, being Alderman Richard Whittington (who financed its rebuilding in the early fifteenth century).

Today, The Lord Mayor of The City of London is an international ambassador for the UK's financial and professional services sectors as well as the constitutional Head of The City of London Corporation (and each of its three component parts). Lord Mayors in the 21st century will therefore spend around a third of their year in office on overseas and regional visits, visiting some 25+ countries and spending 60% of their diary time on the ambassadorial business promotional role. The Lord Mayor is elected annually at Common Hall, selected from and by the Court of Aldermen.

The Sheriffs

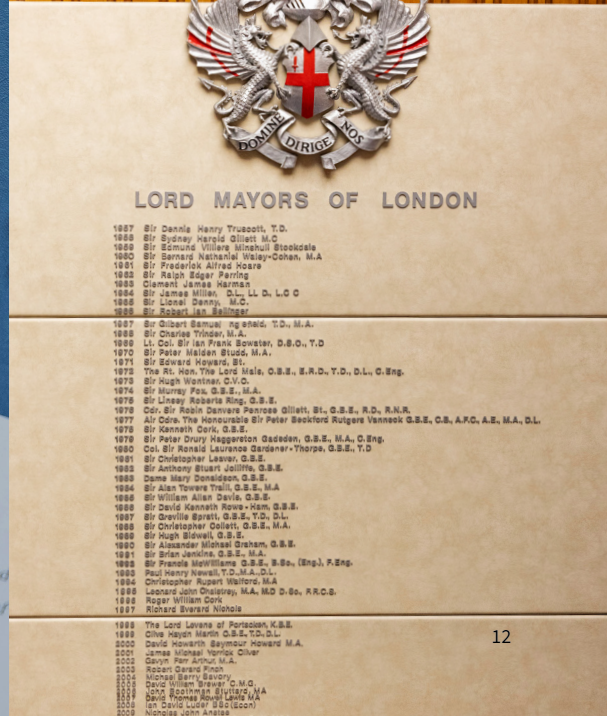

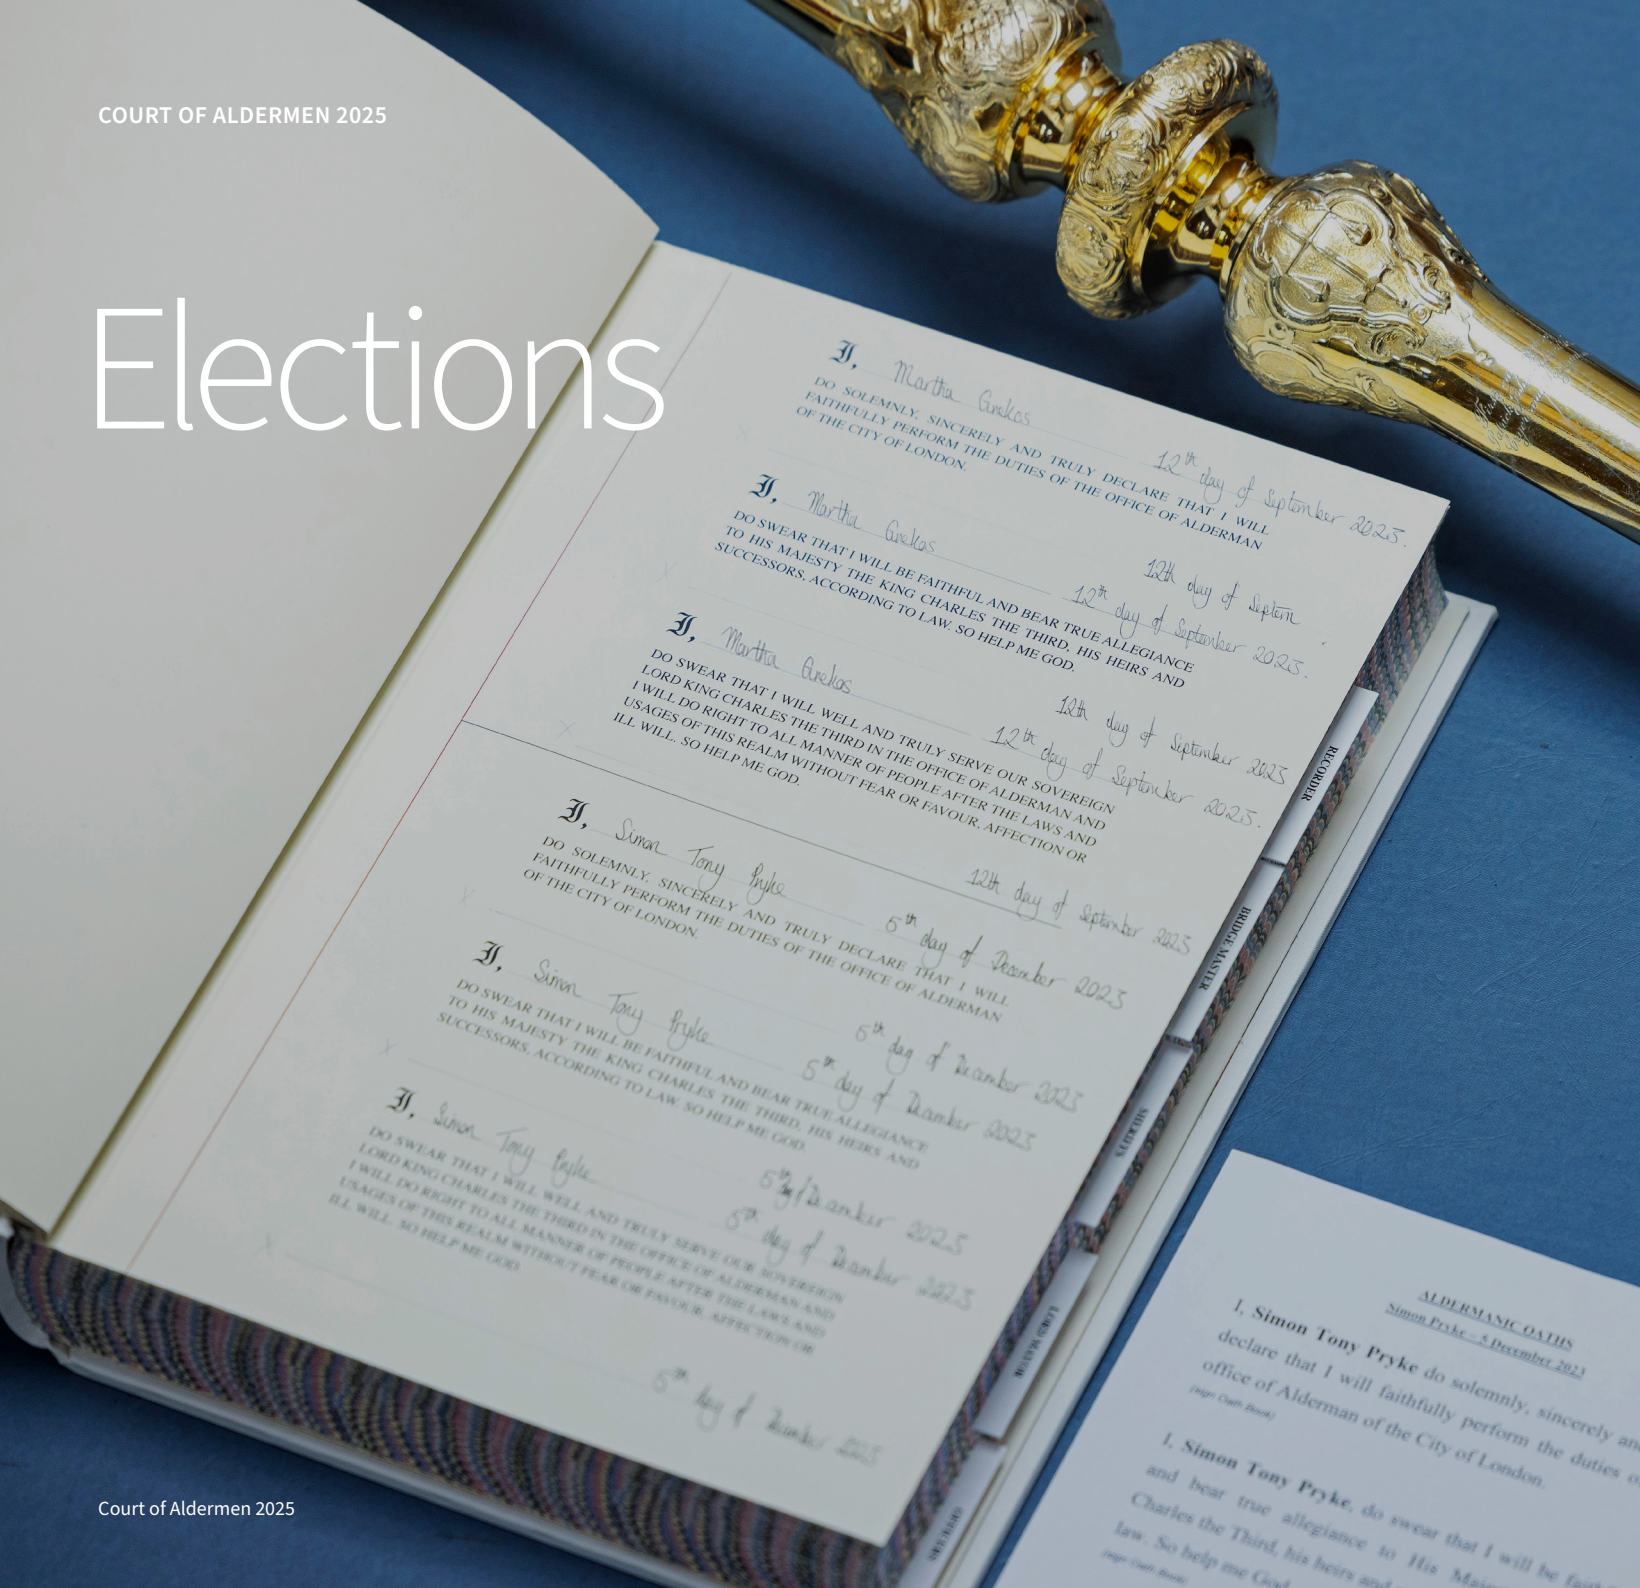

Perhaps the most (in)famous Sheriff (a contraction of the Anglo-Saxon ‘shire reeve’ or, in Old English, ‘scirgerefa’) is the Sheriff of Nottingham – immortalised by the tales of Robin Hood – but most of the major municipal conurbations in medieval England also had Sheriffs including The City of London. Today the counties of England and Wales still retain High Sheriffs who are appointed by the Crown though they are largely now only ceremonial.

Exceptionally, The City of London has two Sheriffs serving in any given year (it is a 12 month term of office) and they are elected by the Liverymen of the historic trading guilds (‘Livery Companies’) in Common Hall. By convention, one of the two Sheriffs elected is an Alderman, as it remains a pre-condition for progression to the Mayoralty that prior service is undertaken in the office of Sheriff.

The Sheriffs in The City of London have a unique role in discharging The Corporation's and the CoA's historic commitment to and connection with the rule of law. During their tenure, they reside at the Central Criminal Court (The Old Bailey) supporting the senior judiciary – including through an extensive programme of community outreach and engagement – as well as playing an active working role supporting the Mayoralty as a core element of the senior civic leadership team along with The Lord Mayor.

Voices from the Court of Aldermen

Lady Mayor, Alderwoman Dame Susan Langley DBE

Ward of Aldgate (FIRST ELECTED 2018)

“After a few years, I became one of the two Sheriffs of the City of London in 2023, and then the 697th Lord Mayor. The third female in history, and the first to actually take the title, the Lady Mayor. For me, I think it is important that we build on the amazing platform that tradition and history give the role, but to gently modernise. It’s an office, not an individual, and every Mayor should build on the great work of those before them, and then hand on to the next.”

Alderman Sir Charles Bowman

Ward of Lime Street (FIRST ELECTED 2013)

“The activities of the City of London Corporation are broad and wide but what really interested me to become an Alderman was the role it plays as advocate for UK’s Financial & Professional Services sector... a sector that employs 2.5m people nationwide, accounts for more than 10% of UK GDP and contributes each year from Financial Services alone, some £75bn in tax.”

Alderman Sir Nicholas Lyons

Ward of Tower (FIRST ELECTED 2017)

“It’s been an enormous privilege to have served the City of London. The perspective you get from being Lord Mayor, particularly with the international engagement that’s involved, reinforces just how important it is that the City of London continues to prosper, so that it is able to perform its critical role in financing the UK’s future.”

Alderman Timothy Hailes JP

Ward of Bassishaw (FIRST ELECTED 2013)

“This is a city whose traditions are deep, but are entwined with constant evolution including some of the most innovative thinking and technology on Earth. This is a city where nothing stands still.”

Alderman Canon Alison Gowman CBE

Ward of Dowgate (FIRST ELECTED COMMON COUNCILLOR 1991, ALDERMAN 2002)

“I enjoy the camaraderie of the City, which can feel like a village where the various aspects of my life collide from living in the Barbican, belonging to livery companies, and serving as a Lay Canon at St Paul’s Cathedral. There are so many aspects to the City and I’ve not touched on the underlying driver in its role as the global financial sector underpinning the UK’s economy, with a key contribution from the legal sector where it all began for me.”

Alderman Prem Goyal CBE

Ward of Portsoken (FIRST ELECTED COMMON COUNCILLOR 2017, ALDERMAN 2018)

“I started thinking about how I could support the next generation, and I also wanted to find the secret behind why so many talented people were drawn to the City. That is when I learned about the City of London Corporation and discovered what an Alderman was.”

Alderman & Sheriff Robert Hughes-Penney

Ward of Cheap (FIRST ELECTED COMMON COUNCILLOR 2004–2012, ALDERMAN 2018)

“I’m particularly proud of my role as President of the Ward of Cheap Club, fostering the community spirit makes our Ward so special. And this shrieval year I’m launching an initiative that I’m particularly passionate about, the Justice For All Series. Inspired by the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals and number 16, which focuses on peace, justice and strong institutions.”

Alderman Christopher Makin

Ward of Aldersgate (FIRST ELECTED 2022)

“It is a pleasure to be the Alderman for my Ward and to represent my neighbours in the City, to the City. I enjoy working with them to see how we can make the voice of City residents heard ever more clearly.”

Alderman & Sheriff Robert Hughes-Penney

Ward of Cheap (FIRST ELECTED COMMON COUNCILLOR 2004–2012, ALDERMAN 2018)

Robert has 30+ years' experience of the City working at Rathbones, the UK's largest discretionary investment and wealth business. Within Rathbones he has served as a Board member, spent 12 years on the Executive and Management committees and 20 years in senior leadership. Meanwhile, as an Investment Director he has extensive practical experience of running successful risk adjusted multi-asset portfolios. As a result, he deals first hand with the ebb and flow of global capital markets across a range of asset classes and jurisdictions. He has successfully and consistently navigated difficult financial markets as well as initiating and sponsoring change in a highly competitive sector.

Robert also serves as Chair of the Audit & Risk Committee at the Chartered Institute for Securities & Investment and is on the Board of the Impact Investing Institute that leads the way in the important work of promoting impact investments that are made to generate positive, measurable social and environmental impact alongside a financial return. As a member of the CityUK Business Council Robert engages with leaders from fintech, challenger banks and FPS firms outside the magic circle.

Formerly a Common Councillor, he chaired key committees and has served on the Boards of several charities. Additionally, prior to the City he served in the British Army and is Past Master of the Guild of Investment Managers and on the Haberdashers' Court. Having been born in Brazil and lived in Canada, Germany and South Africa, Robert has an international perspective. He is married to Elspeth, who was formerly a corporate lawyer in the City, and they have three young adult children.
